A4.0 Introduction

The Standard Industrial Classification, commonly referred to as the SIC code, was developed by the U.S. Government in conjunction with U.S. business. It divides virtually all economic activity into 10 major divisions:

Agriculture, Forestry, and Fishing	01 — 09
Mining	10 — 14
Construction	15 — 17
Manufacturing	20 — 39
Transportation, Communications, Utilities	40 — 49
Wholesale Trade	50 — 51
Retail Trade	52 — 59
Finance, Insurance and Real Estate	60 — 67
Services	70 — 89
Public Administration	91 — 97
Non-Classifiable Establishments	99

The SIC places each line of business within one of these 10 divisions and assigns it a four-digit code. The first two digits describe the nature of the activity broadly:

15.....General Building Contractors

The third and fourth digits describe the activity specifically:

1521......General House Contractors

The most significant attribute of the SIC system is that it is the one system most frequently used in presenting the basic data about the nation. No other system is as widely used nor does any other describe in detail the entire U.S. economy. Thus, the system provides the enterprising industrial marketer with a key to a wealth of valuable data. The following are examples of some critical questions the SIC system along with the other data can help you answer:

- How large is the market for my products and services? (i.e., How many companies are in the same business as those that typically buy my product/service?)
- Where are the greatest concentrations of potential buyers? How is the market dispersed geographically?
- How large are the establishments in those markets, in terms of sales and number of employees?
- Where should I locate my branches, retail outlet and service centers?
- How large is the day-time working population in a given geographical area?
